3. On 31 May 50, 47 employees of the DAMG, West Sector inhabitants, were given notice with immediate effect. The remaining employees who lived in the West Sector were warned that they would have to move to the East Sector or also be dismissed. At the same time, 40 other employees were informed that they would have to accept lower salaries. These 40 were principally employees of the former PTR.
4. At the same time DAMG was instructed by the East Zonal government to limit its cooperation with the new Physikalisch-Technischen Anstalt in Brunswick and with the so-called PTR in Charlottenburg (British Sector) to an absolute minimum, both in research and in legal questions. It is understood that this instruction said in particular that any connection with both West German and international Western organizations should be severely curtailed and, instead, a connection should be started with all Eastern countries, such as the USSR, Poland, and Czechoslovakia, and that wherever any questions of standards were involved, an attempt should be made to achieve a standardization according to the Eastern system rather than the Western. At the same time DAMG informed its Western counterparts that it would not further continue in the combined edition of the "Wissenschaftlichen Abhandlungen der PTR". It is also understood, although not confirmed, that the Eastern German Republic may request special representation in the Conférence Générale des Poids et Mesures and the Comité International des Poids et Mesures in Paris.
5. The only part of the measures reported above so far confirmed is a letter to the employees who are to receive lower salaries, a copy of which is attached. (Enclosure A) Reports of attempts of the DDR to change its standards from the Western system to the Eastern have been received quite frequently over the last few months. Such reports have come both from FIR circles as well as from DNA (Deutscher Normenausschuss). While I cannot definitely confirm that such a trend exists, it seems most likely that all reports in this direction are true. Obviously, no immediate break is intended, but rather a slow moving-away from West to East.
